MARKET COMMENTARY

July is typically a quieter month on the news front as companies go into 'black out' to prepare earnings announcements and this year was no exception. The lack of stock specific news however didn't seem to slow market participants, with most equity markets around the world taking another step forward to start the 2021/2022 Financial Year.

During July, the ASX Small Ords (+0.7%), ASX200 (+1.1%), S&P 500 (+2.4%), Nasdaq (+1.2%) and MSCI Europe (1.9%) generated positive returns while the Russell 2000 (-3.6%), which tracks small-cap companies in the US, took a noticeable step back. The laggards in the Russell 2000 were predominantly from the Energy sector (-12.8%), falling with the oil price driven by expectations of supply outstripping demand.

Domestically, the large cap part of the market outperformed small caps, up +1.2% versus +0.7% respectively. The month saw a continuation of Growth style outperformance over Value. In the small cap segment of the ASX, the Materials sector (5.8%) provided one of the strongest gains whilst the Health Care sector (-3.6%) was the biggest detractor.

The rapid spread of the delta variant of Covid-19 also weighed on investor sentiment, as countries around the world continued struggling to control the spread of the more contagious strain. The uncertainty surrounding the road to normalcy was the key concern which was somewhat offset by ongoing vaccine rollouts around the world.

Market spectators and participants are likely to be more forgiving around the uncertainty caused by the delta variant in the upcoming reporting season compared to this time last year, a time when the world was scurrying to create a vaccine and better understand Covid-19. We are comfortable with our portfolio holdings heading into reporting season and look forward to the outcomes.

PORTFOLIO COMMENTARY

During July, the Ophir High Conviction Fund's investment portfolio returned -0.1% (net of fees) versus the index which returned +0.7%. Since its inception in August 2015, the Fund has returned 19.8% p.a. (net of fees) while the index has returned 12.7% p.a. since inception.

During July, the Ophir High Conviction Fund's ASX listing provided a total return of -6.2% for the month.

The biggest contributor to performance over the month was Mineral Resources (+17.3%, ASX:MIN). It continued to rally alongside rising iron ore and lithium prices. Resmed (+10.3%, ASX:RMD), one of our top holdings in recent months, was also a significant contributor in July. Resmed continued to benefit from a product recall from competitor Philips of their DreamStation CPAP device in June.

The biggest detractor to performance during July was Afterpay (-18.2%, ASX:APT). Afterpay was featured in our prior update as the top contributor. At the time of writing, Square Inc. (NYSE:SQ) announced its intention to acquire Afterpay and its fall during July has more than fully reversed month to date in August. We had always anticipated consolidation in the Buy Now Pay Later (BNPL) sector, but it began earlier than expected. We think this is recognition that BNPL will be an enduring payment method and the bigger players in the payments space are ensuring they have exposure. Afterpay's share price has rallied strongly since the announcement.

Through all the noise in financial markets, particularly over the last 18 months, we have been reminded to stick to our knitting. This involves finding companies with a growth profile that we believe is underappreciated by the market, trading at an attractive or fair price and preferably holding more cash than debt. In the current environment of circa 0% interest rates and seemingly unlimited liquidity, we continue to be diligent about the price we pay for assets.

INVESTMENT PHILOSOPHY
