About The Fund

The Ophir High Conviction Fund seeks to provide investors with a concentrated exposure to a high quality portfolio of listed companies outside the S&P/ASX 50. Employing an extensive investment process that combines a rigorous company visitation schedule and fundamental bottom-up analysis, the Fund aims to identify businesses operating within structural growth sectors with the ability to meaningfully grow and compound earnings over time. Typically, the majority of businesses within the portfolio will already have well-established business models with large or growing end markets and a clearly identifiable pipeline of future growth opportunities. As a concentrated portfolio, the Fund seeks to identify the very best of these opportunities in order to ensure each portfolio position delivers a meaningful impact on overall portfolio returns.

Market Commentary

Global share markets took a breather in April giving back some of their gains in 2024. Smaller companies underperformed for the month with the ASX Small Ordinaires and Russell 2000 indices returning -3.0% and -7.0% respectively. Japanese stocks also gave back gains with the Nikkei 225 returning -4.9% for the month, while European stocks held up well, with the MSCI Europe falling a modest -0.8%. Large caps were not immune to the sell off with the ASX 100, S&P 500 and Nasdaq indices returning -2.9%, -4.1% and -4.4% respectively.

Growth underperformed Value this month in the domestic market with the MSCI Australia Growth index returning -3.9% and the MSCI Australia Value index returning -2.7%. However, growth stocks are still outperforming value stocks in the Australian market in 2024.

During the month of April, hotter than expected inflation data suggested that the Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA) would need to continue holding rates steady at 4.35%, or perhaps even increase them further in an attempt to get inflation closer to the RBA's target of 2-3%. Trimmed mean inflation for March 2024 was above the RBA's forecast and is currently at 4%. This inflation data, coupled with stronger labour market readings, suggests the prospect of an RBA rate cut this year is less likely, with market pricing suggesting any cuts will be a 2025 story.

Looking at the ASX Small Ords Index, the Materials (+3.0%), Healthcare (+3.0%) and Information Technology (-2.4%) sectors were the best relative performers whilst the Consumer Discretionary (-8.9%), Real Estate (-8.1%) and Financials (-4.8%) sectors were the worst performers.

Portfolio Commentary

During April, the Ophir High Conviction Fund's investment portfolio returned -3.3% (net of fees) versus the index which returned -2.6%. Since its inception in August 2015, the Fund has returned +12.9% p.a. (net of fees) while the index has returned +9.2% p.a.

The Ophir High Conviction Fund's ASX listing provided a total return of -4.8% for the month.

In terms of portfolio positioning, the number of holdings remained the same at 29 and cash levels increased to 4.8%. In response to rising soft landing probabilities, we have incrementally increased allocations to select holdings within the cyclical portion of our portfolio, though cautiously and with a keen eye on ongoing economic uncertainties.

One of the largest contributors to performance for the month was ResMed (ASX:RMD). RMD reported its third quarter earnings which beat analyst expectations, particularly on their gross margins which was previously under pressure. At the same time during the month, its main competitor (Philips) announced that it would not be coming back to the market anytime soon. RMD's share price rose +9.0% in April.

One of the largest detractors to performance for the month was NEXTDC (ASX:NXT). There was no incremental news in terms of how the business is operating however, the business did decide to raise an additional $1 billion in capital during the month to execute on its development pipeline which is being fuelled by, amongst other things, heightened data needs off the back of varied A.I. applications. Its share price fell -5.1% in April.

Outlook

Economists' predictions of a recession in the U.S., which will have major implications for the global economy, continues to drift lower with the current median probability at 30% (Bloomberg economist survey). Healthy corporate balance sheets, strong U.S. employment data and slowing albeit sticky inflation, are lifting hopes of a "no landing" scenario that is likely to keep interest rates higher for longer.

Market pricing (Bloomberg) indicates the first interest rate cut in the U.S. is likely to occur in either September or November and is currently pricing in almost two rate cuts for 2024, but this expectation can change very quickly if (1) there is a recession in the U.S. or (2) inflation stays stubbornly high.

The portfolio remains balanced in terms of cyclical vs. defensive growth companies which we believe is appropriate given the still elevated probability of a recession. Smaller growth companies still remain cheap relative to large caps, after underperformance over the last few years. We expect small caps to ultimately catch up with RBA rate cuts likely to be one potential catalyst.

Investment Philosophy

Investment Process

Ophir employs a fundamental, bottom-up research approach aimed at identifying businesses with the ability to meaningfully grow and compound earnings over time. Typically, the investment process will look to uncover businesses that are operating within, or about to enter, a period of structural growth and are generating cash or have a clearly identifiable pathway toward free cash flow generation. In order to identify these opportunities, the Ophir investment team spend a considerable amount of time understanding the quality of the business and the environment in which it operates.
