Market Commentary

It has been an interesting start to 2026 as markets have shown incredible resilience in the face of consumer confidence weakening. The survey from the U.S. Conference Board showed consumer confidence sank to its lowest level since May 2014.

Primary causes for concern were prices, inflation, and the labour market. Despite this, the S&P 500 (+1.4%), MSCI World (+2.3%), Russell 2000 (+5.4%), and ASX200 (+1.8%) all posted positive gains in January with significant breadth in the U.S. share market.

Artificial Intelligence continues to drive the conversation and is not showing signs of stopping. The IMF increased its global growth forecast to 3.3% stating that the potential overvaluation of tech stocks is not as great as that of the dotcom boom. Meta stated in its quarterly report it would double its capital expenditures on A.I. in 2026.

Similarly, Microsoft revealed a huge increase on data centre spending at its quarterly. But the biggest winner is ASML. Its share price has rallied more than 30% since 1 January after a strong quarterly and projecting sales could grow by ~20% in 2026.

ASML builds the machines that make high-end chips using a method called lithography. Should you be interested to know how it works, watch this fantastic video explaining the science behind the most advanced computer chips (link).

Markets were positive over the month, but we saw a clear standout in small caps over large caps with the Russell 2000 Index (+5.4%) representing the former and the S&P 500 (+1.4%) the latter.

Value outperformed growth this month. The Russell 2000 Value Index up +7.0% versus the Russell 2000 Growth Index +4.0%, similarly the S&P 500 Value was up +2.5% versus the S&P 500 Growth up +0.5%.

Regarding sector performance, Energy was the biggest winner in the S&P 500 (+14.4%), followed by Materials (+8.7%), while Financials (-2.5%) and I.T. (-1.7%) fell the most.

Similarly, within the Russell 2000 Index, Energy led (+15.6%), followed by Materials (+14.5%) and Industrials (+11.8%), while Healthcare (+0.2%) and Technology (+0.5%) were the weakest sectors.

To start 2026, many Central banks didn't meet in January and as such kept interest rates unchanged, this includes the Federal Reserve (3.75%), Bank of Canada (2.25%), Bank of Japan (0.75%) and the European Central Bank (2.0%) and Bank of England (3.75%).

Meanwhile, Reserve Bank of Australia was an outlier, raising rates from 3.60% to 3.85% in early February due to a higher inflation print the week prior.

Portfolio Commentary

One of the top contributors to performance was a A$5.9bn company that is a global aerospace and aviation leader providing maintenance, repair, and supply chain management to commercial and government customers.

The share price increased +27.9% during the month after a strong earnings announcement resulting in multiple broker upgrades.

One of the top detractors to performance was a A$0.9bn software and services company that utilizes a cloud platform to provide intelligence and data analytics for fraud prevention.

The share price fell -20.1% due to the broader selloff in the software sector during the month after putting on significant gains since we purchased in April last year.

Outlook

The U.S. market is seen as the leading indicator for into 2026.

Geopolitical tensions, aggressive foreign policy, and weaker consumer confidence are currently being offset by the lagged impact of rate cuts, tax cuts from households and businesses that are flowing through and deregulation. This is seeing economists upgrade their economic forecasts this year for the world's largest economy.

Markets are still expecting the new Fed Chair, Kevin Warsh, to help lead the Fed in providing more interest rate relief mid-year when he takes the seat. A cut likely increases breadth in the U.S. equity market but risks accelerating inflation.

Across global small caps, companies continue to trade at attractive valuations in absolute terms (15.3x in the U.S. and 13.9x in Europe on a forward P/E basis) compared to large caps (22.0x in the U.S. at time of writing), supporting our outlook.

Greater breadth is coming to equity markets at present, notably in the U.S. as earnings expectations of small caps are now outperforming large caps due to a combination of factors but notably the lagged impact of prior Fed interest rate cuts.

We will continue our disciplined approach, identifying growing businesses with idiosyncratic earnings drivers that we believe will ultimately find favour.

The portfolio maintains a balance of defensive and cyclical companies, though we have recently increased the allocation to those cyclically exposed businesses at the margin as the growth outlook in the U.S. has improved.
